

What we do at WWGR:

All too often, aggrieved clients confront new problems with tools and tactics that are simply too late.

Our tool chest includes litigation, governmental affairs and public relations expertise that is invaluable. But how maddening for a client to learn – with surprise and often too late – that a governmental agency, regulator or official, or a publicly traded competitor is withholding the key to achieving the client’s objective or eliminating the client’s problem.

At Wilson Walsh George Ross, we learn this from our first meeting with clients. They span a wide variety of national and global enterprises.

We learn and then we act.

First we educate ourselves until we can identify and describe the objective or the dispute as well as the client. Then we bring to the matter decades of experience in government, politics, and the media, to focus upon the best solution – often times one that is more expeditious and economical than litigation

In a myriad of situations we have advocated that clients confront seemingly intractable obstacles, and have allowed them to achieve:

- The passage, amendment or defeat of legislation, or the modification by agencies of rules, to assist the clients projects and objectives;
- The cessation of bureaucratic efforts to prejudice or interfere with client endeavors;
- Negotiations with governmental agencies that achieve favorable outcomes;
- The protection of individual and company reputations and brands that avoid loss of share value;
- Successful mediation of disputes on a business-to-business or business to government level.

Our relationships with political and business and civic leaders, at international, national, state and local levels provide us an advantage in communications on behalf of our clients.

Come see for yourself